Four from CX off to Commonwealth Games

African records to her name - 4×100m freestyle relay, 4×200m freestyle relay, 4×100m medley relay and 200m freestyle (short course). The 4x200m freestyle relay record was set at the Tokyo Olympics where the team finished sixth.

Sam Mvimbi

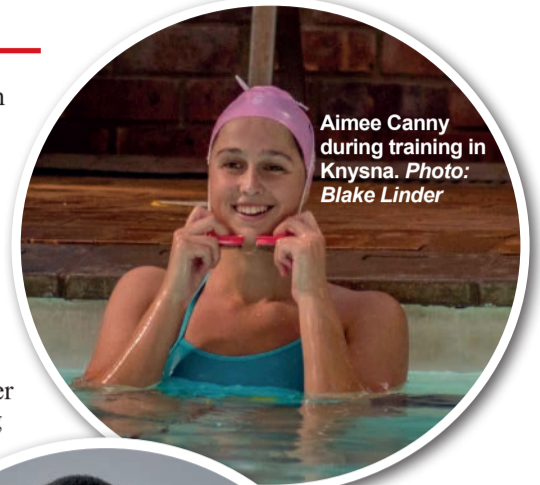

For Mvimbi (23), the Commonwealth Games come three months after he returned to the SA set-up following a break after the Olympics. Since his return against Argentina on 23 April in the FIH Pro League, he has played a further seven games in the Pro League, as a regular starter for the side.

He also has a total of 29 caps for South Africa ahead of the Commonwealth Games, and two goals for his country - the first he scored against Canada at the Tokyo Olympics and the second was scored in one of their two test matches against Wales played in the build-up to the Games. Mvimbi will therefore be heading into the Games on a high.

Zandile Masuku

Masuku (23) is the "greenest behind the gills" of all the Knysna athletes taking part in the Commonwealth Games. Before her inclusion in the Springbok Women's Sevens Commonwealth Games training squad in June and July, she had never been a part of any national rugby structures.

She has however played a healthy amount of rugby for Limpopo Blue Bulls and the Blue Bulls while growing up in Tzaneen, Limpopo, and SWD since her move to Knysna in 2020. Masuku also played club rugby in Spain for Gaztedi Rugby Taldea. On 21 July Masuku was selected, for the first time, as one of the 13 players to represent Imbokodo, as the team is known, in Birmingham.

Mathrin Simmers

The most experienced of the four Knysna athletes at this year's Commonwealth Games, Simmers (34) made her debut for Imbokodo in 2012 and has been representing the SA Women's Sevens team consistently in the decade since. She has also been handed the captain's armband on a few occasions, and remains the only Knysna local to captain an SA rugby side.

Simmers most recently played for Imbokodo against Spain in the Toulouse leg of the 2021/22 World Rugby Women's Sevens Series. She has played in 12 World Rugby Women's Sevens Series tournaments and numerous other tournaments along the way (caps are not counted in sevens rugby, only tournaments).
